BOMBAY COURIE[R]

VOLUME XXXIII.] SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1823. [NUMB[ER]

IT has been resolved, that all Advertisements which appear under the Signature of the Secretary of Government, or of any other Officers of Government properly authorized to publish them Courier, are meant, and must be deemed to convey official Notifications of the Board's Orders and Regulations, in the same manner as if they were particularly specified to any Servant of t[he] others to whom such Orders and Regulations have a reference.
BOMBAY CASTLE, 21st September 1792.

JOHN MORRIS, Secret[ary]

TERRITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

REVENUE,

PROCLAMATION,

IN consequence of the encreasing risk and difficulty of the navigation of the Dhollerah Creek, the Honorable the Governor in Council has directed other Creeks in the neighbbourhood to be surveyed; and having ascertained that Bhowlearee or Bannia Creek affords the greatest facilities; that it's navigation is safe and a depth of water even during the neaps sufficient for the navigation of the Country Vessels of largest size: being satisfied also of the advantages of the measure for the promotion of commerce, the Honorable the Governor in Council has been pleased to declare the Creek of Bhowlearee, a public Bunder from the 1st of February 1823 and to fix the duties at the same rates as are levied at Dhollerah.

2d It is not intended under this arrangement to close the Port of Dhollerah; but those who prefer it may still resort to that Bunder as heretofore.

By Order of the Honorable the Governor in Council,
J. FARISH,
Sec. to Govt.

MR. C. B. BOYCE, Sole proprietor since the death of the late Mr W. Boyce, of the Firm of Boyce & Co. has the pleasure to announce the formation of a new Copartnership consisting of Mr. C B. Boyce, Mr. George Taylor, and Mr Wil-liam Boyce, in the same line of Business as the old Concern or Establishment, from the 1st of January 1823, under the desig-nation of Boyce, & Co. which may be distinctly understood, that Mr. George Taylor, and Mr. William Boyce, have no interest in, or connexion with the Establishment ex-isting anterior to the 1st of January 1823, but that they take their i terest in all sub e-quent transactions.

Mr. Boyce whose health for some time past, has rendered him incapable of paying that close attention to busine s which is ne-cessary to succe s, especially to the suc es of Busin s of the nature of his own, fee s that he is deeply indebted to a liber l and enlightened Community, for the large share of public patron ge which under circum-stances, even of appa ent neglect, has been indulgently extended to him; and in offering his most grate ul acknowledgeme t, which he now most sincerely does, for these, and numerous acts of ki dne s ex erienced from particular friends, he has great plea-sure in giving his assurance that no devia-tion is intended in the Conduct of the new Firm, from that which has gained him so many friends; and that its transactions in regard to promptitude of execution and des-patch will afford greater satisfaction than could have been experienced heretofore by the constituents of the late Establishment, there being now three partners and one Eu-ropean assistant to conduct the Affairs of a Business requiring incessant exertion and attention, which have hitherto been ma-naged by one proprie or only, and one Eu-ropean Assistant.

It being expedient from the declining state of Mr. Boyce's health, that he should try the effects of a change of climate; and, it being necessary that his affairs should be closed to the 31st of December 1822, and put into a train of liquidation, he earnestly solicits an early settlement of the bal nces due to him to that period, on account of the old Concern, and begs that remittances from outstations may be made to "Mr. H. Briggs at Messrs. Boyce and Co's" to whom the management of collection is given, and who, alone, is authorized in Mr. Boyce's absence to furnish acquittances for payments on account of the old concern in which he was sole proprietor, have devoted a large portion of our ...mns, to the English news received at ...dras by the arrival of the York, and ...ve now an opportunity of presenting our readers with a connected account of the King's arrival and reception in the metropolis of Scotland; an event which the public prints seem glad to lay hold of, as affording some relief from the gloomy aspect of affairs in the sister island. If the bulk of popular feeling on this occasion has not been so great as it was on his Majesty's entrance into Ireland, it arises not from any want of loyalty or attachment, on the part of the Scotch, to the person of their Sovereign, or of joy at seeing him amongst them; but may be attributed to the great difference in the circumstances of the inhabitants of the two countries. In Ireland, he visited an oppressed race, groaning under the weight of many calamities, a people in poverty and in idleness; they hail'd his arrival amongst them as an event the most auspicious; they beheld in him the expected deliverer of their country from distress and ruin; their joy was unbounded, but it was the tumultuous gladness of desperate men, for his visit was their only hope! In Scotland he goes amongst a people in the full enjoyment of every happiness, their artificers and peasantry are in constant employment, their commerce is thriving, their agriculture (from the economy of its system) suffers but little from the present depression, they are not burthened with tythes, nor with poor's rates, and the public taxes fall lightly upon them; from his Majesty they expect nothing, for they have nothing to ask; they receive him simply as an honor'd guest, and pay him the respect and attention which are due to a great and good Monarch from a free and happy people.

THE COURIER.

BOMBAY,

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1823.

The late unfortunate occurrence at North cray must have been keenly felt by his Majesty, for the death of the Marquis of Londonderry, whatever may be the opinion of men opposed to him in politics, is a heavy loss to the country at large. In him his Majesty has lost a zealous, an interprising and a faithful servant; the ministers have to lament a colleague whose place they will scarcely find, in the long list of their friends, a name of sufficient weight to fill; the rank of nobility has lost one of its brightest ornaments, and the nation one of its warmest friends. If his measures did not always meet with approbation, the purity of his motives was never doubted; and those who condemned him most, will still acknowledge, that the man who devotes his whole time, his whole talents, and his whole life to the service of his country, deserves some tribute of praise.

We have the pleasure of announcing the return to the presidency of the Honorable the Governor and his suite; he landed on Wednesday morning under the usual salute.

Private letters have been received from St. Helena, by the way of Madras. The Rockingham, Waugh, from this port arrived on the 8th July and sailed on the 30th for London. H. M. S. Ganges, Capt. Collier, and the Hannah, Lamb, after experiencing very bad weather off the Cape, reached that Island on the 6th of August, the former with her mainmast sprung and Crew sickly; the latter (all well) sailed again on the following day. The George Home, Telfer, arrived on the 7th and sailed on the 10th of August.

The Sarah for London will proceed to ...n the course of to'day, and the ... Monday. The Charlotte, Capt. ... be dispatched for England ... the Duke of Bedford about

We have peculiar pleasure in publishing an act of princely munificence on the part of a distinguished Ally of the British Government in this country. His Highness the Guicowar has, without solicitation, given orders for the sum of Twenty eight Thousand five hundred Rupees, to be transmitted, in the name of himself and the officers of his government, as a donation to the suffering Irish. Such unexampled generosity requires no comment!

A Match between Mr. Crawford's Rob Roy, and Mr. Malcolm's Fitz James weight for age. two Miles.

Rob Roy and Fitz James were competitors for the Sweepstakes, on the 1st day's running, which was won easily by the Chieftain, but not running so well for the Bombay Subscription, led to his being challenged by Fitz James, the latter the favorite for this Race.

Fitz James got the start by a length or two at going off, which Rob Roy made up, and headed at the first Turn, Fitz James however again got the lead before passing the stand which he kept all round, and won easily. Time 4 14

The Races this year have been more varied and interesting, than for several part seasons; and a Turf Spirit has shewn itself (limited by that moderation in betting, so long the distinguished characteristic of the amateurs on this course, which promises still better prospect of amusement in future and which we trust will insure the continued countenance of the society in general at the presidency, so essential towards the support of this noble and manly amusement.

The subjoined account of Purses to be run for next year, will no doubt be acceptable to our sporting readers.

We regret to say that Mr. Burns, Surgeon of the Ship York, died on the 4th November off the Cape.

From a very minute perusal of the papers put into our possession by the Ship York we infer that a considerable difference of opinion existed between the late Marquess of Londonderry and his Royal Master. His Majesty it appears wished the Duke of York's debts to be brought under the consideration of Parliament with a view to their being paid off—against which the Noble Marquess urged the strongest objections—nor was Lord Londonderry less displeased with the appointment of Sir Benjamin Bloomfield mentioned in our last Extract—to a Sinecure formerly held by the Noble Secretary's Brother, Lord Stewart—but the grand cause of displeasure seems to be his Majesty's Visit to Scotland, contrary to the advice and wishes of the Noble Marquess. We must leave our Readers to judge of the acute feelings of disappointment and vexation to an illustrious individual who had thus long basked in the sunshine of Royalty. As Englishman we would fain desist from throwing a stain upon the National Character—but we are equally ready to throw a veil over the weakness of suffering humanity. We cannot reconcile to our minds the idea of the gay doings in Scotland at the very time that England's Monarch perceived a dangerous and declining state of health in one who had so long directed the helm of State.—It was intended to have rewarded the Noble Marquess with the title of Duke of Ulster.

The Fidelity, the Zeal, and the Discipline which have been so characteristic of the Army during his connection with it, have been a source of the highest gratification to him; he could expatiate with equal truth and pleasure on the brilliant Gallantry of the Troops But what in his opinion has distinguished the the most, is the humane care shown by all Ran that the Inhabitants of the Countries thro' wh Divisions passed should suffer as little as pos from the Progress of the Forces.

Tho' the Marquess of Hastings had not portunity of witnessing in person, with reg to the Madras and Bombay Forces in the fiel this generous feeling towards the defenceless People, he can from Official Reports speak as confidently respecting them as he can relatively to the Bengal Troops whose kindly considerate attention on this point he had constant occasion to observe with admiration. The sentiment thus indulged by the different parts of the Combined Army has it's reward in the Gratitude manifested by a vast Population to every Detachment that moves thro' Central India.

His Lordship, therefore, desires to includ the whole of His Majesty's and the Ho Company's Forces in India in the Warm Tr which he hereby offers to their Merits; and trusts all Portions and Descriptions of those Forces will believe in the earnestness of his Parting Prayer for their Welfare.

CAPE INTELLIGENCE.

Cape Town Gazette, Oct. 29.— The Luna, which arrived in Table Bay, on Wednesday last, brought a full Cargo of Wheat, amounting to 3,000 Bags, and upwards. The Regalia, expected to sail shortly after, is said to have a part Cargo of Wheat and Flour, for this place. The reports from the neighbouring Districts, of the state of the Wheat Crops, are favorable:—so that, by the Blessing of Providence, there are well grounded hopes that plenty will re-appear.

The Leander, Captain Richardson, bearing the Flag of Rear Admiral Sir Henry Blackwood, Bart. K. C. B. arrived in Simon's Bay on the 11th instant, from the East Indies. The Leander brings intelligence of the Death of Dr. Middleton, late Bishop of Calcutta.

It having been reported to His Excellency the Governor, that Canine Madness had unfortunately made its appearance in the Stellenbosch District. His Excellency has been pleased to give orders, that the matter be referred to the ablest Medical Gentleman, whose report, as to the best method of treatment, in the first instance, will appear in the next Gazette.

ENGLISH EXTRACTS.

THE COURIER, AUGUST 19.

THE KING'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

(FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE ON SATURDAY.)

Admiralty Office, August 17.

A dispatch has been received from Commodore Sir Charles Paget, dated off Berwick the 13th instant, reporting, that after very tempestuous weather on the preceding night, the King, in his Majesty's yacht the Royal George, reached the entrance of the Firth of Forth on the morning of the 13th, but that the wind blowing with great violence from the west north west, and a good deal of sea getting up, the Commodore felt it his duty to advise his Majesty to anchor for shelter in Berwick Roads, which was accordingly done, at nine A. M. the Royal Sovereign yacht being in company.

His Majesty remained in perfectly good health, and it was his Majesty's intention, as soon as the weather should moderate, to proceed to the Firth.

A further dispatch, dated the 14th, from Leith Roads, announces that, at two P. M. on that day, the King had reached that anchorage in his Majesty's yacht Royal George, attended by the other yachts and the rest of the squadron. Edinburgh Gazette Extraordinary.—Wednesday August 14.

His Majesty having been pleased to fix the hour of twelve o'clock to-morrow, the 15th of August, for his landing at Leith, the procession, formerly ordered by the Edinburgh Gazette Extraordinary, of the 10th instant, will be ready to move off from Queen-street, at ten o'clock, in the order therein prescribed, with these alterations:—

1st. That the attendance of the Peers is not expected.

2d. That the Lord Lieutenant of Mid Lothian, on horse back, will follow, instead of proceeding the carriages of the Officers of State.

3d. That after the keys of the city shall have been delivered to his Majesty, the carriage of the Lord Provost will fall into the procession immediately behind the Lord Lieutenant of the county of Mid Lothian, and the carriages with the Magistrates of Edinburgh will fall in behind the Deputy Lieutenants of the county.

EDINBURGH, THURSDAY, AUG. 15.

The appearance of this city and its environs, from an early hour this morning, was singularly interesting. The shops were all closed, and all ...business suspended, except the duty of ...paying attendance to the King. The latter part of the morning was rather bleak and gloomy, but it cleared up before 10 o'clock, and the picturesque objects which met the eye, when turned either to the Firth of Forth or the mountainous scenery at the opposite side of Edinburgh, surpassed any spectacle ever seen in this metropolis. The Firth of Forth is itself, under any circumstances, a beautiful prospect—no shore view can be more full of objects calculated to improve the coup d'œil of a pageant. The bard of Scotland has truly described it in his lines—

"You or the shores of Fife you saw;
"Here Preston-bay and Berwick law;
"And broad between them rolled
"The gallant Firth the eye might note,
"Whose islands on its bosom float,
"Like emeralds chased in gold."

But when to these natural beauties were superadded the splendor of the royal shiping, occupying an octangular position in the water, at nearly equal distances from the royal yachet,—

"And on the north within the river,
"Appeared the form of England's King;"

the streamers from the ships of war, and particularly from the Admiral's ship, which was decorated with all the colours of the rainbow, forming an arch along her rigging from stem to stern; the expanse of the sea in this part of the harbour, covered with small boats and pleasure yachts, filled with elegantly dressed people, anxious, by entering within the lines of the ships of war, to catch a passing glance of the royal yacht—when this assemblage of interesting objects was taken together, it is impossible to conceive a more beautiful combination of attractive scenery and gay bustle. What made the appearance of the city more characteristic was, that each person seemed engaged in promoting the arrangements, and every place had an occupier. Calton-hill, Salisbury Craigs, and the Castle, were covered with people who seemed content to partake of the scene below them, by such aid as their telescopes could furnish them, and their view of the royal squadron was certainly the best. The peopled summit of these bleak eminences, the unusual display in modern times, upon such precipitous cliffs, of lines of artillery, the steady and military air of the soldiers who had charge of the guns, the appropriate and tower-like object presented by Nelson's pillar amongst the busy crowd, and the still grander and stupendous structure of the Castle on the adjoining hill, where,

"Highest and midmost was descried,
The royal banner floating while,"

presented a combination of objects to which no description can do adequate justice. While the people on the stupendous hills which overlook the city were thus engaged, the corporate bodies of citizens were equally active in taking up the positions assigned them for assisting in the grand ceremonial of receiving his Majesty. The principal inhabitants of Leith assembled, at ten o'clock in the High School yard, some dressed in full black, others in blue and nankeen or white trowsers (the dress,) optional each with a St. Andrew's cross, and white rod: they afterwards took their station in the following order:—

BERNARD-STREET, SOUTH SIDE.

1. From the triumphal arch to Quality-street, the Incorporation of Shipmasters.

2. From Quality-street to Charlotte-street, the different Incorporation of Trades, joined by the Society of St. Crispin.

3. From Charlotte-street to Coatfield-lane, the Incorporation of Carters.

4. From Oatfield-lane to Leith-walk, the Society of Carpenters, Cork-cutters, in the order here mentioned, and other tradesmen not named.

BERNARD STREET, NORTH-SIDE.

1. From the triumphal arch to the corner of Mr. Scarth's house, the Incorporation of Maltmen.

2d. From the north-corner of the Assembly Rooms to Charlotte-street the Merchant Company.

3. From Charlotte-street to the Links-lane, the Incorporation of Porters and the different Societies.

4. From the Links-lane to Leith-walk, Rope-makers and other tradesmen; Rope makers on the right.

While these preparations were carrying on in Leith, similar arrangements for marshalling the citizens of Edinburgh were taking place in that metropolis. At ten o'clock large bodies assembled in Queen-street, to the west of North St. David-street. At the same time the Lord Provost and Corporation assembled in their full robes, and with all the insignia of office, and moved forwards towards the barrier in front of Union-street, Leith-walk, the place fixed for his Majesty's reception upon entering the city. The Corporation arrived on this spot at eleven o'clock. The Members present were the Right Hon. William Arbuthnot, Lord Provost and Lord Lieutenant of the city; the Baillies and Deputy Lieutenants, Alexander Henderson, Thomas Blackwood, John Smith, and John Lyall, Esqrs; the Lord Dean of Guild, A. Dickson, Esq. treasurer; John Manderston, Esq., the old Provost, together with the Old Baillies, Dean of Guild, Treasurer, Merchants, Counsellors, Trades' Counsellors, Ordinary and Extraordinary Council, Deacons, &c. in all the paraphernalia of their respective offices. The gate at the barrier was not rustic, as was at first mentioned; but plain and resembling one of ordinary architectural form. It was surmounted by the corporation colours, and among them an ancient one, said to have been used formerly in Palestine; its tattered appearance secured it a claim for having been on service in holy, or unholy wars.

At half past eleven o'clock, the whole of the civil and military arrangements for receiving his Majesty were completed with excellent precision, ...most order prevailed in Edinburgh and Leith. At the latter place the coup d'œil was extremely attractive. The quay for the royal landing was principally occupied by the chief constables, under the superintendence of Mr. Scarth, the moderator; the Scotch Greys, the Mid-Lothian yeomanry, the archers, and detachments of highlanders, also occupying their respective positions. The whole of the Pier extending from this quay to the water's edge was covered with seats filled by well dressed people. The opposite quay (next the Custom-house had also seats, similarly occupied, under the direction of the special constables. The drawbridge was uplifted to prevent accidents by any rush across that communication, and the extremities were fitted up with platforms chiefly filled by ladies. The space between the portcullis, which otherwise would have presented a broken and dangerous object, was occupied by the stern of a large ship, which was neatly adorned with branches of trees and heath flowers, and which also afforded accommodation for a number of persons. Above was an extraordinary spectacle; the vessels in the river had all squared their yards, and on them stood, forming straight lines, rising pyramidally to the topmast, a number of sailors with white trowsers, who shouted repeatedly, as the music of the Highlanders played on the ground. The particular spot prepared for his Majesty's landing was as near as possible to that used on similar occasions by former Monarchs. It was exactly opposite the Custom-house, and about 100 yards from the lower drawbridge, which is already described. A floating platform was provided for the occasion, and ingeniously constructed so as to enable his Majesty to land either at low or high water—a broad flight of 20 steps, covered with scarlet cloth on a grey ground, was attached to this floating platform, and communicated with the quay; another platfrom was erected for his Majesty to stand upon while receiving the homage of those deputed to tender their first congratulations upon his touching the shores of Scotland; and this platform extended to the drawbridge, where his Majesty's carriage was in waiting. Upon it stood in readiness to receive his Majesty, William Child, Esq. Admiral of the town, (a local civil officer); John Macfie, Esq. the senior magistrate of Leith; James Resch and Abraham Newton, Esqrs., the other resident magistrates, in their corporate gowns with their several assistants. Besides these local magistrates, who were ex officio the principal superintendents, there were also on the platform, the Marquis of Lothian, the Lord Lieut. of the County, in full military uniform wearing the star and riband of the order of the Thistle; the Earl of Fife, attired as a Spanish Grandee, Earl Cathcart, who is Lord Vice-Admiral, but he wore a military uniform; the Marquis of Winchelsea, dressed in the Windsor blue, as Lord Chamberlain; Lord Charles Bentinck, in the same uniform, as Treasurer of the Household; the Lord President of the Court of Session, the Right Hon. Charles Hope of Granton; the Lord Chief Baron, the Right Hon. Sir Samuel Shepherd; Right Honourable W. Adam, Lord Chief Commissioner; the Lord Justice Clerk, the Right Honourable David Boyle; the Lord Advocate, Sir William Rae; the Right Honourable William Dundas, Lord Register, all in full uniform, together with their several attendants. The whole of these arrangements being completed at half-past eleven o'clock, the utmost suspense was felt in the short space which elapsed before the firing of the signal gun, to notify the King's departure from the Royal yacht. At five minutes before 12, this gun was discharged: it was re-echoed by the battery from the fort, and from all the stations around the city. The discharge of the artillery was hailed by shouts from the pier, from the multitude there assembled, who could see the approach of his Majesty. In a quarter of an hour the guard-boats from the several ships of war attached to the Royal squadron rowed into the river, near the Custom-house, and lay on their oars opposite the landing platform. The fourth launch, bearing the royal standard, conveyed his Majesty, who sat between the Marquis of Conyngham and Lord Graves. Sir W. Keppel & one or two of the other Equerries were also in the launch. Col. Thornton, Admiral Sir E. Nagle: and other personages of the royal household, had landed from one of the previous boats. His Majesty was dressed in a full Admiral's uniform, with a gold laced hat in which he wore the cross of St. Andrew, and a large thistle. He took off his hat, and bowed repeatedly to the congratulations of the people as he rowed alongside the quay. The royal barge was steered by Commodore Sir Edward Paget. Upon its arrival at the foot of the steps of the platform, his Majesty was assisted from the launch by the Marquis of Conyngham and Lord Charles Bentinck. The Marquis of Winchelsea fell upon his knees to receive his Sovereign. The King spoke affably to the Marquis of Lothian and the other Scottish Noblemen as he ascended the steps leading to the quay. Upon his landing on the upper platform on the quay, he was received with the usual obeisance, by Mr. Macfie, the Senior Magistrate of Leith, who addressed him as follows:—

"May it please your Majesty—I have the honour to cyngratulate your Majesty in the name of the Magistrates and community of the town of Leith, upon your auspicious arrival in this your ancient kingdom of Scotland."

The King received Mr Macfie and the other Magistrates in the most gracious manner, and condescended to express his satisfaction at the excellent order and convenience of the preparations which were formed under their directions for his accommodation in landing. His ...majesty then passed along to the ex... of the platform, where his open carriage, ... by eight beautiful bays, and in the state ha... ness, state liveries, &c., awaited his reception.

After the King took his seat, the Duke of Dorset and the Marquis of Winchelsea occupied the opposite one. His Majesty continued to bow to the multitude who cheered him. As he entered his carriage, at 25 minutes past 12 o'clock, the cavalry, infantry, archers, and Highlanders, presented in their respective forms of exercise their salute, amid the firing of the artillery.—

"The guards their martice pikes advanced,
"The trumpets flourished brave,
"The cannon from the ramparts glanced,
"And thundering welcome gave."

In the midst of this profusion of compliments, and although his Majesty affably conversed for a minute or two with those whom he recognised, he evidently laboured under a depression of spirits. Although in apparent good health, his features were pale, and their cast sombre & thoughtful. This dejection was attributed to the death of the Marquis of Londonderry.

As soon as his Majesty had taken his seat in his carriage, the procession set out in the following order:—

The procession proceeded up Leith-walk, and at 10 minutes past one o'clock his Majesty's carriage arrived at the city boundary, below Picardy-place, where the Magistrates, in their robes, were waiting to receive his Majesty. A herald from Sir Patrick Walker, Usher of the White Rod, came forward and knocked thrice at the barrier gate, after which Sir Patrick Walker advanced and required the gates to be opened in the King's name. This demand was immediately complied with, when Sir Patrick went forward to the Lord Provost and claimed admission for the procession in the name of his Majesty. These ceremonies being finished, the procession entered the barrier, amid the loud and reiterated acclamations of the assembled multitude, which his Majesty repeatedly acknowledged, by taking off his hat and bowing. When the royal carriage entered the barrier, the Lord Provost, attended by the Magistrates, advanced, presented the keys of the city, and addressed his Majesty in the following terms:—

"May it please your Majesty— We, your Majesty's most faithful and loyal subjects, the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of Edinburgh, animated with the warmest feelings of attachment to your Majesty's sacred person and Government, have embraced the earliest moment of approaching your Royal presence, for the purpose of congratulating your Majesty on your safe arraival in your ancient hereditary kingdom of Scotland, and of offering for your gracious acceptance the keys of your Majesty's good town of Edinburgh; this dutiful cerimony, Seir, does not, as in former times, represent the direct command of gates and fortifications, these having been long since rendered unnecessary by the internal peace and happiness which Edinburgh has enjoyed under the mild and paternal government of your Majesty, and your Majest's father of happy memory. This ceremony now implies, that we place with loyal devotion, at the disposal of your Majesty, the hearts and persons of our fellow-citizens, and bid your Majesty a heartfelt welcome to this metropolis, so long the residence of your Royal ancestors."

The King stood up in his carriage and bowed repeatedly to the Lord Provost during his address. The latter then delivered to his Majesty the keys of the city on a crimson velvet cushion, which the King received; but instantly returned using the following expressions:—"I return you these keys, being perfectly convinced that they cannot remain in better hands than in those of the Lord Provost of my good city of Edinburgh." The whole corporation then retired backwards from the royal presence, the Lord Provost's carriage taking its place immediately following the Peers, and the Magistrates taking their places in the procession immediately after the Lord Lieutenant of the country. The procession then moved onward by picardy-Place, Yorkplace, North St. Andrew's-street, South St. Andrew's-street, and, turning to the left proceeded by Princes's-street and the Regent-bridge to the Palace of Holyrood.

On the procession reaching the Abbey, the different squadrons and bodies which formed the procession marched through on the north side to the King's Park. The guard of honour was composed of the flank companies of the regiments in the Castle. At the gate was a detachment of the Celts, and six household servants of the King. The royal carriage reached Holyroodhouse at half-past one, and was received by a number of the noblemen and gentlemen who formed part of the procession. Immediately a royal salute was fired from Salisbury Craigs, the Calton Hill, and the Castle.

That part of the Palace which was open for the ceremony is handsomely fitted up. The presence room, in the west end of which is the throne, is worthy of our great and good King. The walls are covered with scarlet clote, a large mirror covers the east end, and the throne and canopy cover the west. On the east entry from the presence chamber is the entre room; on the west is the Royal closet. The front of the acpale was guarded by a party of military, and the Sutherland clans of Highlanders: immediately within the grand entrance were stationed a squadron of the Celts; the staircase was guarded by the ancient beaufitiers. At the head of the staircase were stationed five Royal Archers, with their bows upright. Leading from the staircase into the Royal closet were seven archers, and two of the royal pages. On the moment at which the King descended from his coach, peals of cannon from the castle, Salisbury Craigs, and Calton Hill, joined by shouts of thousands, the rent air.

The King was received at the Palace by the Duke of Hamilton, Keeper of the Palace, who had the honour to kiss hands. The Duke of Montrose, the Lord High Chamberlain, Lord Melville, the Lord in Waiting, &c. and followed by the Officers of state, Lord High Constable, and Usher of the White Rod, who had the honour of being particularly noticed, and of kissing hands, the depute King at Arms, Duke of Argyll, great Master of the Household, and their attendants. His Majesty looked round the Palace, and seemed much gratified by the general appearance; he moved up stairs with a firm step, bowed to the Noblemen and Archers, and retired into the Royal closet. He was afterwards attended by the Lord Chamberlain, Lord Melville, and Mr. Peel. After remaining a short time, the King proceeded to the Presence Chamber, bowing in a condescending manner to the Noblemen who attended him.

Immediately on his Majesty being seated on his Throne, the Knight Marischal and his two Esquires, bearing the regalia, (who were ready at the lower end of the room,) advanced towards the Throne, making three reverences; first, at the place where they were stationed; secondly, at the middle of the room, and thirdly, at the foot of the Throne. The Knight Marischal then (on his knee) presented the Crown, and the Depute Lord Lyon of Scotland, in obedience to his Majesty's command, summoned the Duke of Hamilton to receive it (on his knee,) from the Knight Marshal, and he immediately took his station on the right hand of the King. The Knight Marischal then received from his Esquires the Sceptre, and presented it in like manner as the Crown. The Deputy Lord Lyon then summoned Lord Francis Leveson Gower, as the representative of the Earl of Sutherland, who on his knee received the sceptre from the Knight Marischal, and took his station on the left hand of the King. The sword of State was in like manner presented and delivered to the Earl of Errol, who took his station on the right hand of the King. The Knight Marischal then had the honour to kiss the King's hand, and retired with his two Esquires making three reverences, to the lower end of the room.

Immediately afterwards, the Duke of Montrose announced, that the Lord Provost and Magistrates of Edinburgh were in attendance to present an Address. The Duke, by His Majesty's command, introduced the Lord Provost and Magistrates and Council, who advanced, with three reverences, to the foot of the Throne, when the following address was read by Mr. Cunningham, the Senior City Clerk:—

TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

"We your Majesty's most dutiful and devoted subjects, the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of Edinburgh, with the deepest sentiments of attachment to your sacred Person and Government, beg to approach your Majesty's presence, in order to tender our dutiful congratulations on your arrival in the Palace of your royal ancestors.

"It is with feelings of the most solemn kind, mingled with joy and with wonder, that we perform a duty of this high nature to the Monarch of Great Britain in halls which have witnessed in former times so many vicissitudes of royalty, and which have been silent and unoccupied for such a length of years. More than two centuries have elapsed since your Majesty's Place of Holyrood ceased to be the principal residence of Royalty, and more than one since Edinburgh resigned the dignity of an independant metropolis. These sacrifices, although important to the consolidation of the empire at large, had their temporary inconveniences and disadvantages, which, thanks be to God and to the paternal government of your Majesty and your Royal ancestors, are known to the present inhabitants of Edinburgh only by tradition.

"We are proud to say, that while necessarily deprived of our Sovereign's presence, the Citizens of Edinburgh have never forgotten the ancient ties of intimate communication between your Majesty's Royal ancestors, and the former inhabitants of this city. They have thought it their duty to press near the Throne, whenever an expression of their feelings would be becoming or proper; they have rejoiced when your Majesty and your fathers have rejoiced; and they have sorrowed with your Majesty in those sorrows from which none are exempted. In the hour of need, their population and their property were placed with ready hands and devoted hearts at your Majesty's disposal; and if amidst the wonderful vicissitudes of a late eventful period, a royal visit to Scotland had been dictated by a desire to call forth to the uttermost the resources of the country, under these circumstances your Majesty would have experienced as heartfelt a welcome from Scotland, and it's capital, as even now, when your arrival is that of a Monarch prosperous and triumphant beyond the example of British record, in peaceful progress through a flourishing empire.

"We will not enlarge on the sense we have of the personal fatigue & inconvenience to which your Majesty must needs have been subjected in the voyage undertaken to do your ancient kingdom this distinguished honour; still less will we apologize for what may have been imperfect in your Majesty's reception, from want of time, of means, or of the experience necessary on such occasions.

"If our preparations could have been made in any degree to correspond with the joyful and dutiful feelings by which they have been dictated, never Sovereign's entrance into his ancient capital would have been more distinguished than that of George the Fourth into the metropolis of Scotland.

"Signed in name and by appointment of the Lord Provost, Magistrates & Council of the City. Seal affixed thereto.

(Signed) "W. ARBUTHNOT, Lord Provost."

The King made a suitable reply, in which he expressed the very high confidence he had always placed in the people of Scotland, and the pleasure he had in coming among them; that he would always continue to hold the City of Edinburgo in the highest favour. The Lord Provost had the honour to kiss hands, and the Baillies, the Dean of Guild, and Treasurer were severally introduced, and kissed hands. They then retired with three reverences. The King then left the Throne, and several of the Judges of the Court of Session, Justiciary, and Commissary Court, and the Judge Admiral, who were in attendance, had the honour of being introduced. The King, preceded by the Regalia, borne by the respective Peers to whom they had been committed, then proceeded to the Royal closet. The bearers of the Regalia having placed them on the table retired with three reverences. The King then commanded the attendance of the Captain-General and Council of the Royal Company of Archers, to perform the service of delivering a pair of barbed arrows, which is the reddendo contained in the charter by Queen Anne, in favour of the Royal Company.

The Earl of Hopetoun then proceeded to the Royal closet, followed by Sir George Mackenzie, as Vice President of the Council, carrying the barbed arrows on a green velvet cushion, and accompanied by Sir David Milne, John Russell, Esq. Captain Robert Hay, R. N. and Major Norman Pringle, who (with the Earl of Dalhousie) compose the Council of the Royal Company. Sir George Mackenzie then delivered the arrows to the Earl of Hopetoun, who presented them to his Majesty, stating, that by the Royal Charter in favour of the Royal Company, they hold their privileges under the crown, for the service of a pair of barbed arrows, which on the part of the Royal Company, he now humbly offered to his Majesty, and craved a continuance of his Royal favour and protection. To this address his Majesty was pleased to make a most gracious reply, and received the arrows, which he handed to one of his attendants. The Earl of Hopeton then kissed his Majesty's hand, and proceeded to the private entry, attended by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lords in Waiting.

His Majesty left the Palace for Dalkeith a little after three o'clock; and as he stepped into his carriage, he called Lord Lynedoch to him and expressed in the hearing of many individuals, the great satisfaction he had experienced to-day, and stated, that he had never been more gratified in his life-time particularly with the admirable arrangements that had been made.

ARRIVAL AT DALKEITH.—His Majesty has been received in this town with manifestations of the most perfect loyalty and attachment. The people assembled in crowds to hail the arrival of their Sovereign, and at night a genera illumination took place, with a grand display of fireworks. Numerous bonfires blazed on all the surrounding hills, and in short every thing was done to testify the joy of the people at his Majesty's visit. His Majesty had yesterday a select party to dine with him, consisting principally of the great Officers of the household, with three or four other distinguished personages. The ground and scenery around this town, cannot, it is presumed, fail to accord with his Majesty's approved taste, and we may venture to hope, that he will be induced to protong his sojourn with us at least for some days beyond the very short period he has prescribed to himself. His Majesty arrived from Edinburgh at half past three o'clock, in a close carriage, and a guard of honour lined the streets as he passed along.—Edinburgh Star.

We are happy to inform our readers, that, notwithstanding the extent of the procession, and the immense concourse of people, far exceeding any thing ever remembered here, the whole passed off without any accident.

It is quite impossible to describe the enthusiastic congratulations with which our beloved Monarch was received. The scaffolds raised along the whole course of the progress were filled to the top with spectators in the dresses recommended for the occasion, and displaying on their breasts the medal with the Cross of St. Andrew, with the white and blue ribbon surrounding it. Every window was filled, and as he passed, acclamations of joy were raised by the men, and white handkerchiefs waved by the Ladies.

Perhaps one of the finest sights of the day was the side of the Calton Hill, looking towards Prince's-street, every accessible spot to which, was crowded to such a degree as to hide both the grass and the rocky side of the steep. The shout that was raised from the multitude that stood or rather hung on the slope as the Royal carriage passed beneath was quite sublime.

One part of the seremonial which seemed to attract much of the admiration of the spectators was the Bands of Retainers (or, as they are technically termed, the Tails) of the Highland Noblemen and Gentlemen in the ancient Celtic arms and clothing. The two most remarkable were those of the Earl of Breadalbane and the Marchioness of Stafford. Her Ladyship's tail was really magnificent, consisting of about 100 of the finest men of her clan.

EDINBURGH, SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.—His Majesty arrived in town from Dalkeith early this morning in his travelling chariot and four horses, accompanied by the Marquis of Conyngham and the Earl of Winchelsea, and alighted at Holyrood-house, at a quarter past ten o'clock, preparatory to the levee which was this day opened at twelve o'clock. Along the streets on the line appointed for carriages, were placed divisions of the Scotch Greys to prevent interruption, and the Court-yard of the Palace was occupied by the archers, some companies of the 13th Foot, and three bands of of music played national airs, both in the front court and lawn. The carriages exceeded 400 in in number. At two o'clock his Majesty arrived, dressed in a rich suit of the Royal Tartan, in which garb he received his visitors. These amounted to 900 or 1000, and were composed of persons from all the counties of Scotland, all in full dress, or in military or naval uniform. The ceremony, so new to Scotland, was conducted with wonderful order and regularity, from the accurate arrangements of the Comptroller of the Household.

At twelve o'clock the carriages began to set down. All the Officers of State, Judges, and Law Officers of the Crown had precedence, by a different entrance from that to the public in front; 140 carriages conveyed the nobility and gentry to his Majesty's levee; the greater part of the company were dressed in a military uniform. The whole of the nobility whose names were mentioned in the procession of his Majesty's entrance were in attendance, as well as the principal gentlemen of the Scottish bar and church. His Majesty seemed in better spirits than on the day of his landing; a great crowd occupied the avenues to the Palace, but the utmost order prevailed. His Majesty yesterday received several visitors at Dalkeith, among them were the Duke of Buccleugh, the Duke of Dorset, the Marquis of Lothian and Earl of Winchelsea, the Earls of Fife and Lauderdale, and Lord Melville had a long audience. The King, at seven o'clock, had a select party to dinner. The last public reception at Holyrood House was by Prince Charles Stuart in 1745, when the principal inhabitants were called upon to pay their assessments to enable that adventurer to attack the throne of his present Majesty's grandfather. The very tartans that now decorate the chieftains who are doing homage to the King, were at that time worn by persons who were chivalroously engaged in promoting the interests of the unfortunate man whose success must have involved the ruin of the house of Brunswick. THE LEVEE.—It having been announced in The Gazette that his Majesty was to hold a Levee at his Palace of Holyrood, at two o'clock on Saturday, at rather an early hour of the morning of that day, a train of carriages began to assemble. Those carriages at the least were about 400 in number, containing, we believe, from 900 to 1,000 of the liege, in countless variety of rank, costume, gait, and physiognomy. As a very considerable proportion of them had never been at Court before they seemed to be rather at a loss how to demean themselves, and not a little astonished at the quick time at which they were made to pass from the presence of his Majesty. "Heigh! Sirs! but its short wark this," said a brawny yeoman from the kingdom of Fyfe, as at the bottom of the stairs, he laboured to squeeze his minimum of opera hat upon his maximum of caput. "Hech, Sirs! but its short wark," said he, brushing the unmanageable beaver under his arm, and striding across the quadrangle till he gained the outside of the grand entrance, where laying a scrutinizing hand upon his head, he said to himself with much satisfaction, "I find 'tis upon my shoulthers after a'." Of the attendants, the civic authorities of the different Burghs, every sept of whom stuck as close to one another as if they had been in their own Council Chambers, wore faces of the most broad and boundless delight. Nor were the Deputation from the Clergy and Scottish Universities less pleased with the honour which had been conferred on them. Sir William Curtis again appeared in the Royal Tartan; but he had for borne the philebeg and addicated himself to the trewe. The King arrived from Dalkeith precisely at two; he was elegantly dressed in the Royal Tartan, in which garb [illegible] received his subjects. Many of the attend[illegible] bewildered themselves in the winding pass[illegible] of Holyrood, and not a few were exclaiming, like Sterne's starling, "I can't get out!" The d[illegible] was favourable, the ceremony went off well, an[illegible] the people seemed upon the whole to be ver[illegible] much delighted.

While speaking of the Levee it may not b[illegible] amiss to mention a case of unanimity among the Edinburgh Magistrates, which occurred upon their being presented to the King when he landed:—His Grace of Montrose, by whom they were introduced, had instructed them to do in all things as he did, meaning of course that they should do it seriatim; but they, accustomed to hang together, made all their paces and bo[illegible] one in the rear of the other, and contemporaneously with his Grace, to the no small amusement of the courtiers, and it is even said, of the K[illegible] himself, who doubtless was pleased to find t[illegible] his loving subjects presented themselves befo[illegible] him in all their native simplicity. The carriag[illegible] approached by the New Road on the Calto[illegible] drew up behind the Palace, and returned alon[illegible] the Canongate. The number of spectators wa[illegible] very great; they were remarkably orderly, and except a cheer on the King's arrival, and at h[illegible] departure, they made no noise. The Levee wa[illegible] over at four.

Yesterday his Majesty confined himself to his apartment during the greater part of the day, and though several Noblemen and Gentlemen called, yet he saw no visitors, till evening, but Lord Melville and Mr. Peel, with wh[illegible] ued a long time in deliberation[illegible]

(From the Edinburgh Observer of Saturday).

His Majesty expressed great delight at his reception, and at the appearance of the city and people, to several persons to whom we have spoken.

We yesterday heard from the very best authority, that his Majesty was quite confounded with delight, at the first appearance of Leith.

One circumstance, we are proud to mention, as it gives a better idea of the characteristics of the Scottish people, than volumes written on the same subject could convey; there is not one single record on the police books of this metropolis, of any offence committed against the laws, since his Majesty has been in Scotland.

His Majesty heard the intelligence of the melancholy event from North Cray when he was off Dunbar.

His Majesty has observed a peculiarity of manner in the Marquis of Londonderry, previous to his departure from London. He said to him, "Londonderry, I am sure you are not well; you have had too much business; you had better rest yourself quiet for a little."

Lord Londonderry said to a gentleman, now in Edinburgh, that he did not like the idea of going to the Continent, and wished to avoid it. He … not cross the street in London one day, … before the King had left London, as had been … custom, to speak to our informant, which was observed at the time, to be a very remarkable difference from his usual conduct.

His Majesty lived very retired yesterday. His fatigues, and the grief he must have felt at the late news, required repose.

CALEDONIAN MERCURY,—August 22.

We are enabled to state that his Majesty has graciously determined upon honouring the Theatre Royal with his presence; and we understand that it has been suggested in a high quarter, that those having frequent access to his Majesty's person should abstain from visiting the theatre on that occasion; as, from the small size of the building, it would prevent many from attending who have no other means of seeing their beloved monarch.

The following are said to be the royal movements during his Majesty's stay here;—

Friday---Grand cavalry review on Portobello Sands, at 12 o'clock---and Peers' ball in the evening.

Saturday---The civic banquet.

Sunday---His Majesty goes to the High Church in state; the Rev. Dr. Lamont, Moderator of the last General Assembly, is to preach.

Monday the Caledonian Hunt ball.

Tuesday---His Majesty visits the Theatre, where the play of Rob Roy is to be performed---and on.

Wednesday---the King leaves Edinburgh for London

Preparatory to the grand cavalry review, the following yeomanry corps arrived in Edinburgh yesterday.---

Berwickshire---under the command of Colonel. Marshall of Edrington.

Peebles-shire---under Sir James Montgomery of Stobs, Bart. Glasgow---under Captain Oswald.

…---under Colonel Thomson of Charleton.

…wshire,---under Captain Hamilton Dundas

… Colonel Ballantyne of Phaw

Roxburgh---under Colonel Elliott Lockhart.

The East Lothian, Lanarkshire, & Stirlingshire yeomanry are expected to-day

It having been determined that the sword which was used by the renowned Sir William Wallace, and now in the possession of the noble family of Loudon, who are lineal descendants of that illustrious hero, should be in readiness for the inspection of his Majesty, the sword has been sent off from Loudon Castle, in Ayrshire, under an escort of a detachment of the Loudon troop of Ayrshire yeomanry cavalry.

August 16, 1822.

The East India Company's ship Lowther Castle arrived off the Wight on the 14th inst. and in the Downs yesterday afternoon. The Bridgewater and Charles Grant arrived off the Wight yesterday. The Lowther Castle and Bridgewater sailed from China on the 23d of March, and arrived at St. Helena on the 23d of June. The Lowther Castle sailed from St. Helena on the 28th of June, the Bridgewater on the 29th of June. The Lowther Castle spoke the Warren Hastings, outward-bound, on the 11th of July, in lat. 9. 51. N. long 21. 53. W., all well. The Winchelsea and Dorsetshire were in sight. The Charles Grant sailed from China on the 14th March, arrived at St. Helena the 18th June, and sailed from thence for England on the 22d June. The William Fairlie, outward bound, was all well in lat. 20. 56. S. long. 81. 0. E. on the 13th April. She left Table Bay on the 21st March.

August 19.

We have been able to procure an authentic copy of the letter which was writen to Dr. Bankhead by the Duke of Wellington after his Grace's interview with Lord Londonderry: and we are the more anxious to lay it before our readers, as it will be observed that the letter which found its way into the public prints, differed in some material respects from the correct copy which we now publish.

"London, Aug. 6, 1822.

"Dear Sir,—I called upon you with the intention of talking to you about Lord Londonderry; and of requesting you would call upon him. He promised me that he would send for you, but least he should not, I entreat you to find some pretence for going down to him.

"I entertain no doubt that he is very unwell. It appears that he has been over-worked during the last Session; and that his mind is overpowered for the moment, and labours under a delusion. I state the impression made upon me in the interview I have just had with him. I told him that this was my impression; and I think it is his own. and he will probably communicate it to you. But least he should not, I tell you what I think; begging you never to mention to any body what I have told.

"I am setting out this moment for the Netherlands. I would have said with Lord Londonderry, but he would not allow me I shall be very much obliged to you, if you will write me a line, and have it left at my house, to let me know how you find him; and particularly if you think I am mistaken.

Ever, dear Sir most faithfully

"Dr. Bankhead. (Signed) "WELLINGTON.

"I believe he is going down to Cray this afternoon."

(From the Journal des Debates of Thursday last.)

"The death of the Marquis of Londonderry; at the very moment when he was about to proceed to the Congress of the five Powers, is one of those unexpected events by which Providence is, pleased to derange human combinations. At any period, the loss of such man would be felt; but on the eve of a great European negotiation, it is a blow which must produce a temporary suspension in the progress of affairs.

"The prudence and diplomatic skill of so experienced a Minister are not the only qualities which render this loss incalculable. It is to be taken into consideration that the Marquis of Londonderry was personally esteemed, courted, and beloved by the most powerful Sovereigns of Europe, to whose intimacy he was admitted. This circumstance rendered that Minister a kind of conciliatory power, and in some measure a mediator between all the Courts particularly at the personal meetings of the Sovereigns. He was at once the Nestor and Ulysses of the Congress. The mildness of his discourse powerfully aided the dexterity of his combinations.

"Can we after this loss hope for prompt and decisive results from the Congress? The Continent possesses great Ministers and wise Princes; but where shall we find a new mediator for the necessarily diverging interests of the Powers? Who can bring to that office so many personal advantages with so much political knowledge? Who will represent England, whose influence is alone capable of balancing that of Russia? Who will take upon himself the task of defending the decisions of the Congress before the British Parliament?"

CALEDONIAN MERCURY, Aug. 26, 1822.

On the evening of the day when the intelligence reached Paris of the death of the Marquis of Londonderry, it was remarked, that not an Englishman appeared at the Opera.

August 22, 1822.—The Moniteur of Thursday gives the issue of the trials at Colmar. There were about fifty persons accused; but the Jury only found four of them guilty, and that of not revealing the existence of a conspiracy, which took the capital charge away. These four individuals, Colonels Teillier and Pailhes, and the inferior officers Guinaud Dublar, were therefore only condemned to five years imprisonment together with a fine of 500 francs (about L. 20), and to remain for five years longer under the special superintendence of the high police.

Mr. Kean commenced an engagement for 12 nights here on Monday night, in the character of Richard III. The house has been crowded every night.

His Majesty left Holyrood Palace for Dalkeith with the same suite and attendants that accompanied him on his arrival, and was greeted by a repetition of the cheers which hailed his arrival from large bodies of the most respectable persons and, as the King drove along his private road to Dalkeith palace he passed through the beautiful triumphal justic arch erected at Niddrie mill by the worthy, proprietor Mr. Wauchope. who takes his station at it, attended by a large body of his tenants and domestics, daily, to greet his Majesty as he drives along.
